An entirely new perspective

on where the global strategic architecture —
and modern civilization —
is headed ...

When do civilizations begin ... and end? And how?

Is this what we are witnessing as the 21st Century matures?

And as a totally new global architecture presents us with an unrecognizable world?

What does it all mean for the stability of nation-states, the prosperity of societies, the way we live and wage wars over the coming decades?

UnCivilization: Urban Geopolitics in a Time of Chaos outlines how we are already entering an age in which global population levels will begin to decline substantially, even as urbanization and economically- and security-driven trans-national migration gather pace. Population decline and movement patterns are also intersecting with economic and scientific patterns, while urban social attitudes — the politics of urban societies — have created a revolutionary new political, social, and strategic reality.

This is an entirely new game. It's time to learn the rules.
